TELLS OF CHIEF DEFECT, RELIEF ADMINISTRATION

"Lack of Responsible, Efficient Control in Local Board in Each County"

CHECKS TO EMPLOYED

HARRISBURG, June 24—(INS)—One of the chief defects of the present system of administering unemployment relief in Pennsylvania is the lack of a "responsible, efficient control in a local board or director in each county," in the opinion of the legislative committee investigating jobless aid in the state.

The committee, of which Rep. Miles Horst, Lebanon, was chairman, in its preliminary report to the legislature, recommended immediate decentralization of the present relief set-up.

"Employment relief has been conducted under various branches such as the division of direct relief, the works relief division, the financial division, disbursing office, the employment office," the report stated.

Christine C. Delia And Andrew Ferraro Are Wed

At three o'clock yesterday afternoon in St. Ann's Church, Miss Christine C. Delia, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Delia, 205 Otter street, became the bride of Andrew Ferraro, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gennaro Ferraro, 300 Washington street. The Rev. Marcellini Romagnolo, pastor, performed the ceremony, and the bride was given in marriage by her father.

Miss Frances Tamburello, organist, rendered the instrumental selections; and Percy G. Ford was the soloist. Mr. Ford sang "Oh, Promise Me" and "I Love You Truly."

Mrs. Ferraro was attended by Miss Clementina Oriole, 604 Wood street, as maid of honor; Miss Jenny Piezo, 320 Penn street, and Miss Christina Yezzi, Holmesburg, as bridesmaids. Vincent Delia, brother of the bride, was best man and Ralph Baldi, Holmesburg, served as usher.

Mrs. Ferraro's gown was of bridal satin made very long and on Empire lines. Over this, she wore a coat of Spanish lace paneled in satin. The coat had a Queen Elizabeth collar. The sleeves, puffed to the elbow, had long, tight fitting cuffs. This fell in a long train. The bride wore a long veil of tulle edged to lace. This fell from a cap, which was caught on either side with orange blossoms. She also wore a face veil and carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses.

The attendants wore gowns alike. These were of pale blue toned taffeta, made with high waisted lines, V-shaped neck-lines with pointed revers front and decollete backs. With these frocks, they wore three-quarter length jackets of the taffeta, the skirts of which flared from the hips. The sleeves were short and puffed. Their hats were of yellow straw and they carried yellow tea roses. They also wore yellow sandals.

A reception at St. Ann's hall, followed the ceremony. More than 400 guests were in attendance.

Mr. and Mrs. Ferraro are passing their honeymoon in Washington, D. C. They will reside at 300 Washington street, where the groom is in the shoe-making business.

The bride traveled in a cocoa-colored suit of tree bark material with brown taffeta trim. Her accessories were of brown.

"Jim" Cagney Comes To The Grand in Film, "G-Men"

"G-Men," First National's sensational picture written about the heroic deeds of the secret service men in the United States Government Department of Justice, opens today at the Grand Theatre.

The picture is said to be one of the most thrilling and dramatic pictures ever presented, based on sensational newspaper headlines which have covered the front pages of all the dailies of the country.

While the picture presents no names of the public enemies nor emphasizes any time or place of the actual battles, few will miss the actual connection of the occurrences that take place.

The production is enacted by an all star cast headed by James Cagney as the leading "G-Man," the red-headed star having turned from crook roles to government agent. Margaret Lindsay has the leading feminine role opposite him.

FATHER REFUTES CHARGES MADE BY HIS OWN SON

Feasterville Youth Shown To Have Been Implicated In Minor Thefts

BEYOND ALL CONTROL

DOYLESTOWN, June 24—At a hearing in chambers Saturday, Judge Hiram H. Keller and Calvin S. Boyer heard the other side of the story in the case of Donald Compton, 18, Feasterville youth, who last Thursday in criminal court pleaded guilty to a charge of stealing a knife and 88 pennies from his father's home, and charged his father with harsh treatment.

The father, William H. Thompson, was not in court on the day of the first hearing because he had no notification of the hearing. Saturday the Court heard the father's side of the story.

The elder Compton, father of a family of seven children, informed the Court that his son, Donald, had been implicated in a long series of minor thefts over a period of a number of years. The father informed the Court that he has made every effort to discipline his son but with no good results.

After hearing the father's story, Judge Keller, after consulting Judge Boyer, directed that young Compton be placed in the custody of Charles Baner, a Feasterville farmer, that the boy be placed on probation for a period of three years with Deputy Sheriff Harry Ross as the probation officer, and that the boy remain away from his parents' home during the probationary period.

THE WAR TO SAVE EYES

Quietly but tirelessly, new forces are being mobilized in a noble war—the war to save human eyesight. Doctors, nurses, teachers, governmental and private health agencies, illuminating and safety engineers and civic groups throughout the nation are collaborating in the work of the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness, says the annual report of that organization.

A study of causes of blindness among 2,700 children in schools for the blind, undertaken by a committee sponsored by the society and other organizations, will help to determine new lines of sight conservation work. One field in which a new approach is contemplated is that of Fourth of July eye injuries which cause many cases of total blindness every year. The society's report asserts that these accidents are far more numerous than generally supposed and that control through local legislation is hopeless. The real remedy, the society believes, can be found only in control of fireworks manufacture and in education of the public.

The annual report is illustrated with photographs of the Dionne quintuplets whose shining eyes are described as "the best known eyes of the year." This helps to recall the magnificent achievement of the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness in combating ophthalmia neonatorum, formerly the cause of an appalling number of cases of blindness among newborn infants. Total eradication of this malady is an objective of the society. When and if that goal is reached, much of the credit will belong to Dr. F. Park Lewis of Buffalo, pioneer in this crusade to save babies' sight.

Another part of the campaign to save infants' eyes is the society's collaboration with the American Medical Association and the National Health Council in furthering blood tests for expectant mothers as a safeguard against blindness caused by prenatal syphilis. The report sees hope of solving this tragic problem in a generally more receptive attitude toward open, scientific discussion of a topic once under a taboo.

The war to save sight goes on in many other sectors. These include 459 sight-saving classes for children with defective vision in 146 communities; legislation for prevention of industrial eye accidents; formulation of a national code on safety glass, designed to prevent loss of eyesight in traffic accidents; and development of social service departments of eye hospitals and clinics.

Here is one war worth while. May it be waged to complete and permanent victory!

ECHOES OF THE PAST

By Courier Staff Member

Review of the news as it appeared in the Bucks County Gazette issued at Bristol, Dec. 18, 1873. The Gazette, a weekly newspaper published in Bristol, was discontinued following its merger with the Courier.

On last Saturday the Old Keystone Forge property was formally transferred to the Bristol Franklin Company. About the first of the year work will be commenced in putting up furnaces and getting things in shape, preparatory to the manufacture of Zinc and American Spiegel. There has been, we are informed, over $40,000 worth of stock pledged and promised by residents of Bristol. The indications are that the balance of $100,000, that Bristol has the opportunity of purchasing, will all be taken. After the first of January, the President, Orville L. Grant, will remain here and give his personal attention to the affairs of the Company.

We have often heard of milk being watered, but never, until last Monday, did we see a milk man attempt to carry a pump with him. One of our milk vendors got out of his wagon near the corner of Radcliffe and Mill streets, tied his horse to the pump at the edge of the sidewalk and after attending to some business started to drive off without unhooking it. It is hardly necessary to say that the pump didn't move worth a cent.

NEWPORTVILLE — In consequence of several highway robberies and other depredations that have been perpetrated in this vicinity, the solid men of the town have formed themselves into a Vigilance Committee, with Mr. C. C. Brown, president, Messrs. C. Rue, G. Staake, J. C. Fetter and many other functionaries are to act as detectives and captains, to be under the immediate direction of the captain or a deputy. Upon notification of any lawlessness it will be the duty of the members to turn out en masse for the apprehension of the perpetrators.

Last Sunday morning thirteen persons were added to the membership of the Methodist Church, as a result of the revival which is still going on in that church, making a total of 51 converts who have joined on probation since the meetings commenced.

Examinations will be held in the public schools on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. On Wednesday the examination of the high school will take place and in the afternoon of the same day public exercises will be held.

NEWPORTVILLE — The Newportville Social Union Club met last Monday evening and elected the following officers: H. T. Staake, president; Miss Sue Magill, secretary; W. H. Foster, treasurer; S. Williams, vice president.

The election which took place on Tuesday last on the new Constitution passed off very quietly, so quiet, in fact, that outside of the immediate vicinity of the polls it would hardly have been known that an election was taking place. There was a light vote polled—only 435 persons voting—the borough giving 151 majority in favor of the instrument.

The committee on Water Works appointed by the Bristol Board of Trade, held a meeting at 46 Mill street, Tuesday evening, December 16th. All the committee were present. The principal business transacted was the laying off the borough into districts and appointing sub-committees to canvass each district thoroughly. The following are the districts and committees: 1st district—all of Radcliffe street and all the cross streets to Cedar street. Committee—William Kinsey and Charles E. Scott. 2nd district—all of Cedar street and all the cross streets to Wood street. Committee—Morton A. Wainley and Arthur T. Collins. 3rd district—all of Wood street and all the cross streets to the canal. Committee—Dr. E. J. Groom and Joseph W. Swain. 4th district—all of Otter street and Langtown. 5th district—all of Bath and Buckley streets to mill pond. Committee on both districts—J. Wesley Wright, Samuel Swain, A. F. Young, 6th district—all of Mill and Pond streets. Committee—L. A. Hoquet and Jesse B. Mears. Our citizens are notified that each and every one will be interviewed by some of the above named gentlemen, and will be solicited to take either stock or water, or both. The committee have pledged themselves for at least $7,000.

For the past week Mrs. Margaret Longhurst has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Watson, Allentown.

Dinner guests on Sunday of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Haefner were Miss Emma Boulden, Philadelphia; and Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Hibbs, Bristol.

A week is being spent by Mrs. Wil-

Ham Reitzel and children, Doris and Quentin, of Lancaster, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Codling. Mr. Reitzel was an overnight guest one day last week at the Codling residence.

The Hulmeville W. C. T. U. will hold its June business meeting at the home of Mrs. Helen Illick, Wednesday evening.

ment bureau, etc," the committee reported. "In the past there has been a lack of co-ordination between these divisions each operating separately under various rules and regulations from Harrisburg and Washington and without anyone locally having authority to bring them into co-operation. As the conditions in the several counties and areas differ widely it is wholly impossible for uniform rules to apply satisfactorily. The result is necessarily confusion, inefficiency and waste, and what was intended for equality becomes gross inequity.

"One or two examples may be sufficient to illustrate this condition. For instance, relief checks have been mailed to persons for weeks after such recipients have been reported by employers or others to have been given employment. This is due to the fact that such information must go around-about course from one person or office to another and through a devious system of files and cards so that a long time elapses before the paymaster obtains the knowledge which stops the taxpayers' money from going where it is not needed.

"Again by reason of the fact that a uniform budget system is set up applying to all counties or areas, persons on farms or small tracts of land or in other favorable situations may be given the same relief as those without the aid which these circumstances might have afforded if properly used. Even in the same county, different sections produce different conditions which cannot be met by any standard set of rules."

Relief administration, in the opinion of a majority of the committee, "Should be decentralized to a much greater extent than at present and the local boards should be given authority to make such rules as will provide reasonable relief at a minimum of expense to the taxpayers."

WHOSE WIFE? A CYRUS K. MANTEL MURDER MYSTERY

by GLADYS SHAW ERSKINE AND IVAN FIRTH

CHAPTER XXIX

Cyrus K. looked at the type of covering the butler chose for the body of his young mistress, then he looked up into the face of the old man.

"That's very thoughtful of you," he told him gently. "How long have you been in Mr. Millbanks' service?"

"Ever since he was born, sir," the old man answered. "I was with his father when I was a very young man, first came to this country."

"His eyes filled with tears. This is a terrible Christmas morning, sir," he said, and drew the back of his hand across his eyes. "Will you be needing me any more?"

"Only for a minute or two," Mantel told him. "I want you to stand here beside me, and tell me who was occupying each of these bedrooms that opens, as does that of my niece, onto this terrace."

He took out his notebook and as the butler identified each room and its occupant, he made one of his inevitable drawings for future reference.

"And are all these guests accounted for?" He looked around mildly at the shivering group.

"Lawrence Vane isn't here. He's never shown up!" A thick voice answered his question.

"Who was that who spoke?" Cyrus K. peered through the dim half-light at the speaker.

"I'm Roger Thornley," the rough thick voice said. "I was a friend of Donetta's—I introduced Schuyler to her."

"So?" said Cyrus K. "I see. Well, come everybody—I am sorry but I must ask you all to come with me to some room in the house, where I will have to ask all of you a few questions." He turned to Betty. "Which room would you suggest, my dear?" he said. "You are familiar with the house."

"The library would be best," Betty said, and then gave a little exclamation of distress, as she felt a finger and thumb draw together upon her arm in a distinct pinch.

She turned angrily to look into the eyes of Suky.

They gathered, a grim procession, to follow Betty and Cyrus K. into the upper hall, and down the wide stairs, that had echoed to their laughter a few hours before.

Cyrus K. put his arm round the bowed shoulders of Millbanks.

"Come, son," he said gently. "There is nothing we can do here just now, and much we can do elsewhere—come."

Docilely, Schuyler allowed himself to be led away, and the two descended the stairs side by side.

At the library door they were met by the butler, his face blanched, and his eyes wide with a new shock.

"Mr. Vane's in there," he told them. "I think he's dead. He did not hear me come in—just sat there!"

"Did you go close to him?" Mantel asked. "Did you touch him?"

"Oh, no, sir. I just came in to switch on the lights, and there was a low lamp on, and there he sat before the embers."

A gasp came from the huddled group, but Mantel's quick ears caught one sound that was more like a heavy, stifled grunt.

"Who spoke?" he said, and turned directly to where Roger Thornley stood, a sardonic quirk on his heavy, good-looking mouth. "Did you say something, Mr. Thornley?" he repeated his question.

"No. I was just thinking though, that it's deuced queer that this fellow Vane should be out on bail, and that now this new murder—? He broke off at a sudden flame that leapt into the black eyes confronting him.

"Quite so—quite so," said Cyrus K. mildly.

Soft-footed he walked across the room and laid his hand on the shoulder of the man seated there in front of the fireplace.

Vane leapt to his feet, stared round him at the strange group whose eyes were fixed on him, as though he were some strange species of ferocious beast, or madman never before seen by them.

"What's the matter?" he asked. "Hello, Cyrus K. Mantel! Glad to see you, sir. I'm awfully sorry—I must have fallen asleep. Is it Christmas morning already?"

His newly awakened eyes focussed upon the haggard, drawn face of his host.

"What's the matter, Schuyler?" he said. "Has something happened?"

Millbanks' tortured eyes stared at him for a long moment, then his lids closed tightly, as though he were in pain, and he turned away to a deep chair into which he sank, with his head again dropped into his shaking hands.

"Donetta's been murdered!" came the harsh voice of Roger Thornley. Vane staggered as though from an actual blow. He uttered no sound, but looked unconprehendingly around at the hostile group.

"Mrs. Millbanks is dead," Cyrus K. corrected Thornley's statement. "Is problematic. I fear you would not make a good detective, Mr. Thornley. I see that you are impulsive, and inclined to leap to conclusions."

Thornley turned away with a gesture of anger, and started to walk from the room. At a sharp command from the little man, he halted, shrugged his shoulders, and, taking a chair, sat down, his face sullen, and his eyes insolent.

"First of all, before I start any questioning," said Cyrus K. "I would like to know if anyone has notified the police?"

"Oh, no, no," came from behind the trembling hands of Millbanks. "I suppose there'll be all sorts of scandal and publicity to go through. I had Sands call for a doctor at once, but I knew the minute I touched her that it was too late. I suppose that he'll be along any moment now—but it'll be too late—everything's too late now."

He shuddered, and relapsed into silence.

"No!" Cyrus K. contradicted him sharply. "No! It is not too late for everything. We can still bring the person or persons responsible to justice."

The door bell rang, and Sands admitted the doctor, who went straight upstairs.

Those in the library waited in absolute silence—none daring to speak until addressed by that dominant little figure.

The doctor returned.

"Well?" Cyrus K. looked at him and uttered the small word.

"Murdered, Mr. Mantel," said the doctor. "Chloroformed." He held out in one hand a man's handkerchief. "It was underneath the body," he said.

As the detective took it, a faint sickening aroma of chloroform pervaded the room.

Simultaneously the eyes of the three nearest looked at the monogram in the corner of the rumpled piece of white linen.

Mantel's expression did not change, Suky's eyes stared, and she breathed "Fo de Lawd!" and then caught herself. Betty looked fixedly at the initials for a minute, her black eyes widening—then the silence of the room was broken by her sigh, as she slipped to the floor in a dead faint.

As Betty's slender figure, in its bravely hued pajamas, sagged to the floor, Mantel made a move to aid her, although his jaw muscles set, and his eyes flashed a worried look at Suky.

That steady old soul had already caught her mistress and eased the force of her fall.

Cyrus K. seemed to be more interested in the reactions of the people present, than he was in this unprecedented faint of his usually strong little niece.

His keen eyes noticed that both Lawrence Vane and Wilbur Renton had started forward as Betty slumped into a heap—those same keen eyes were observant that old Suky shuddered Renton aside, and deliberately placed one of Betty's limp hands in Vane's.

The doctor took charge, and in a very short time Betty was trying to smile at them, a somewhat tremulous effort, but a gallant one.

As soon as Cyrus K. saw that she was all right, he nudged her on the head, and turning, walked across the room to the telephone.

"Hello," he said. "Give me the police at Mineola, please. . . Hello! Police? This is Cyrus K. Mantel speaking—I've been brought down here quite suddenly on a case. I think you'd better get up here as quickly as you can. . . A murder at Millbank Manor. . . Yes, I'll be here—everybody will be here. . . Yes, the doctor is here now, Mr. Millbanks' family doctor."

He hung up and turned back into the room.

"Sands?" he said to the butler. "What's that room I see, right next to this one?"

"That's old Mr. Millbanks' study, sir," Sands told him. "He always used it when he wanted to be quiet or undisturbed."

Cyrus K. walked towards it.

"Will you switch on the light for me, Sands?" he said. Then turning to the waiting group he added, "Please be seated, all of you. I shall ask Sands to call one of you at a time, each one of you, so that I can ask you a few questions that may be of assistance to the authorities—and to me—in this tragic affair."

Quietly he went into the other room and closed the door behind him.

Sands came out in a second and said, his old voice quavering: "Mr. Millbanks."

Schuyler Millbanks looked up, startled at the sound of his name, and then with the old servant's hand under his elbow, rose and went into the little room.

The things of interest that Cyrus K. obtained from his gentle questioning was the fact of the young man's love for his bride, and his reason for asking Lawrence Vane to the home party, namely, the painting of his wife's portrait; the fact that he had been with Roger Thornley when he met Donetta; that she had had a very dear friend, Gerry Gordon, a part of her sister act; that she had received a wire the evening before from Gerry saying that she had sailed for the Orient; that he had known Vane longer than he had Thornley, but that he had never known either of them intimately; that he knew of no enemy his wife could have had; that he knew nothing of her past, excepting that she had been a dancer when he married her. To Mantel's question, "Did your wife ever model for any artist?" he had answered:

"Good Lord, no! She would have told me had that been so—she was the soul of honor and frankness."

He told Cyrus K. that he had left her sitting down to sleep in her own room, and that he had shipped out to go to the kennels to see to the comfort of Lass o' Millbank, who was having her first pups that night; that he had returned after a short time, and going softly into his wife's room, to see that she was well and safe and really there—his wife—slumbering beneath their mutual roof—he had found that she was gone. A cold draught from the door on to the terrace had apprised him of the fact that it was open, and he had gone out—to find her body, stripped of all clothing—lying dead—before the dark door of the bedroom occupied by Vane.

Cyrus K. had said: "Mr. Millbanks? When you last saw your wife alive, what was she wearing?"

Millbanks flushed, then paled in agony.

"She had on a set of white satin pajamas," he said. "Part of her trousseau, and she had carelessly placed all of her jewelry on the bed table beside her."

"Was that jewelry still there when you went in to see her and found her gone?" Mantel was as gentle as he could be, although asking questions that he knew must tear the very heart out of the young man before him.

"Yes. It was still there. I felt for her in the bed first," Schuyler said. "And when I knew that she was not there, I switched on her bed light, and the jewels caught the light with their glitter."

She calls it a Cook's tour

NOBODY thought Katherine would make a very good wife. She seemed too frivolous. Always made a game out of everything. Hadn't a practical thought in her head—so it seemed.

Maybe that's why she does make Ed such a good wife. You still wouldn't think she was serious about a thing. Yet she must be. Because you've never seen a house kept better in your life. Or a budget balanced more neatly.

Most women come home from shopping all tired out. Not Katherine! She makes a grand game of it . . . calls it her weekly "Cook's Tour." She pores over her newspaper like a travel map . . . charts a course that takes her to bargain shops . . . and gets there without one wasted step.

How? She follows the advertisements. Watches them as closely as a sailor watches his compass. And she gets fun out of it all. . . But who wouldn't, with a happy home like hers and her knack for saving up money!

She wore long white gloves and carried a colonial bouquet of bridal roses and baby breath.

Miss Godfrey's gown was of turquoise blue net. This was made form-fitting, with a flare skirt, floor length. The sleeves were long and tight and had ruffles of the net falling over her hands. Her picture hat was of natural colored straw, trimmed with a flat bow of the net. She wore natural colored linen slippers and carried a colonial bouquet of vari-colored rosebuds.

The bride's mother wore a frock of pink lace, a black straw hat and blue slippers. Her corsage was of roses. A reception, immediately after the ceremony, was held at the home of Mrs. William B. Parry, "Laurhyme," Langhorne Manor, with 140 guests attending.

Brooks Knowlton, pastor of Bristol Presbyterian Church. Miss Hilda MacArthur, Edgely, was pianist, and before the ceremony she played "At Dawning," "Because," "I Love You Truly" and "Oh Promise Me." Miss MacArthur played "Lohengrin's Wedding March" as the bridal party entered the living-room.

HULMEVILLE DEFEATS MORRISVILLE, 6 TO 3

Hulmeville A. A. remained in the running for the first half championship of the Delaware River Baseball League by defeating the Morrisville A. A. team, 6-3, Saturday on Reetz's field, Hulmeville.

Playing with a patched-up infield, the Hulmevilleites played brilliantly at spots and although held to seven hits, took advantage of wildness on the part of Danny McKenna to score three times in the second, once in the fourth, and twice in the eighth to clinch the match.

"Pete" Devlin was the winning hurler and held the Morrisville club to six hits. He had a bad inning, the fifth in which the Morrisville club counted three times on four hits and a pass. Devlin fanned six batters.

Hulmeville has one more contest to play in the first half, postponed game with Lambertville next Saturday. If victorious, Hulmeville will play Dolington for the initial half championship.

DOLINGTON TAKES FIRM GRIP ON LEADERSHIP

DOLINGTON, June 24—Triples by Miller, Hill and Lewellen helped the Dolington A. A. club to take undisputed possession of first place in the Delaware River League here yesterday. The McGarry boys were victorious over Washington Crossing, 6-3.

The league-leaders outdid the minions of Willard Leedom, 11-7, and bunched their bingles in the third, fifth and eighth sessions to score all their tallies. "Cappy" Matthews fanned thirteen Crossing batters and had a shut-out win until the last canto when Washington Crossing rallied to score a trio of runs.

EDGELEY BRAVES LOSE GRIP IN RIVER GROUP

The Edgely Braves were eliminated from the first half of the Delaware River Baseball League over the weekend by dropping two games. Saturday, the Braves were beaten at Lambertville by "Handy" Ann, 4-1, and yesterday the Edgelyites were trounced at Morrisville, 10-4.

The Morrisville club swatted "Jack" Fraul for thirteen safe bingles in yesterday's contest and were led with the willow by "Bobby" Moore who had three out of four and Malmesbury who connected for three out of five. Fraul played a better batter than pitcher, slamming out four hits.

At Lambertville, Saturday, Hann set down the Edgely team for the second time this season. He pitched masterful ball and never was in danger of losing the contest. In both contests, the Braves were weakened by the absence of regular players.

TWO NET MATCHES HOLD CENTER OF INTEREST HERE

In the tennis matches played on the Elks Courts yesterday, the local team defeated the Alpha team of Langhorne by the score 5-3, with one match counting as a draw.

Interest centered in the two leading matches between Lawrence of Bristol and Blank of Langhorne and Green and Gause. Blank it will be remembered was paired with Swayne in the doubles championship match last year in the Trenton tournament, defeating Lawrence and Green. Gause is a formidable opponent and ranks as a seeded player in tennis circles in eastern Pennsylvania. Both Bristol boys maintained their superiority by defeating their opponents, Lawrence winning 6-1; 6-4; and Green, 1-6; 6-1; 6-2.

"Mink" Warner, who is rapidly developing as a tennis star, was defeated by Campbell of the Alpha team by the score 6-4, 8-6. The game between Dr. Fredericks, of Bristol, and Patterson of the Alpha team, was extended to three sets, the latter winning 9-7, 3-6, 6-1. In the two remaining matches, Dicks defeated Rice 3-6, 6-4, 6-4, and Pickering easily took Bud Pearson's measure, 6-0, 6-1.

In the doubles matches, Lawrence and Green had no trouble in defeating Gause and Blank, 6-1, 7-5. Sam Pearson and Mink Warner ran away with Patterson and Pickering by the score 7-5, 6-1. The battle of the afternoon took place between Bud Pearson and Dr. Fredericks and Campbell and Rice. The former team won the first set 8-6, but lost the second 6-8. In the third set after each team had won eleven games and the games had gone to deuce six times, it was decided to end the contest and call the set a draw.

Green left this morning for Long Island, where he will be in charge of tennis during the summer, at the New Prospect Hotel, on Shelter Island.

LANDRETH'S ALL-STARS SPLIT DOUBLE-HEADER

Dave Landreth's All-Stars split a double-header with two Jersey clubs over the week-end. Saturday, the All-Stars beat out the Lakewood A. C., 6-2, and yesterday the club bowed to the Salem A. A., 11-4.

"Eddie" Sullivan hurled for the seed-packers in the win game, fanning fourteen batters and giving up seven safe hits. He was very invincible in the pinches. The feature of the contest was a triple steal worked by the Bristol boys in the fourth when Rockhill stole home, Barrett, second, and Gotwald, third.

president, the Rev. Francis C. Thomas, Yardley; 2nd vice-president, Thomas Davis, Lansford; 3rd vice-president, Francis Johns, Lansford; 4th vice-president, the Rev. R. H. Keiffer, Pocomo Lake; junior superintendent, Miss Grace Paist, Cheltenham; intermediate councillor, the Rev. E. F. Carwithen, Philadelphia; treasurer, Miss Frances Hellyer, Langhorne; recording secretary, Mrs. Joseph Beer, Richmond; corresponding secretary, Miss Eileen Stagg, Philadelphia.

The final events of the two-day convention included devotions early Saturday afternoon, with the Rev. Francis C. Thomas, Yardley, in charge; a tour conducted by Bristol League with Doron Green as guide; a fellowship dinner at five o'clock, and an address in the evening by the Rev. Walter F. Humphrey, Langhorne.

Saturday afternoon's tour to historic points in this vicinity was made in private automobiles, with a Bristol Leaguer in each car to point out the public buildings to the guests. Among those shown were: the Delaware House, the Farmers National Bank, home of the Spanish ambassador Don Dionas, the Arnold home where the Hutchinson family once lived, Keene Home, the manufacturing district, the Burlington-Bristol bridge, and Pennsbury. Stops were made at the Keene Home and at Pennsbury. The young people enjoyed a tour of inspection of the former, with their attention being called to historic pieces of furniture. At Pennsbury Charles Henry Moore explained about the excavations and the work that is planned.

After calling the evening meeting to order, with election of officers then taking place, Mr. Phillips introduced the new president, the Rev. Hammerly, who pledged his earnest interest in the work of the Epworth League.

The Rev. Humphreys was presented by the new president, and delivered a stirring address which inspired the Leaguers to greater effort. The subject of the speaker was "The Lure of the Impossible." Hawthorne's story of the Great Stone Face was recounted, with emphasis placed on the life of the lad "who through quiet and pious service at last likened the Great Stone Face." The Scripture verse on which the talk was based was "Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it."

Countless stories of success attained in spite of difficulties were recalled by the Rev. Humphreys, as he told of the vicissitudes overcome by men and women of determination. He held up to the young people as examples those who have made great advances toward the civilization of the world, and in many cases "have done such because the world said such could not be done. . . . If you will persevere, then one day you will succeed in whatever you desire. Young friends, the world has a way of turning aside for those who are determined." Then he told of the great ideal that burned in the soul of Livingstone as he served in Africa; and of Thomas Edison who accomplished the seemingly impossible. Then in closing the Langhorne pastor said: "I think the greatest lure of all time is the lure that comes from Him, the Hero of Heroes, Jesus Christ"; then he spoke of the joy of those who have gone forth to emulate His life, "The greatest lure of all is the lure that leads on, and teaches the Fatherhood of God, and the Brotherhood of Man. . . . But to follow this lure, and do great things for the Master require effort, surrender and courage on the part of those concerned."
